A Clockwork Indigo

Kyle Turner

under emerald eyes
i, try harder
each day – like, basalt reaching out from icy fissures – like, the mind
is an island
and these savage thoughts have purpose.

there's a complex web of jungle trails spun orbiting the moon exhaling youth in the name of sacrifice – like, gold wings chanting unspoken verses once scribed in quicksand.

i count backwards
in the memory of lies –i connect constellations
like lizard tails and slug slimed abstractions of a reality now forgotten.
if the crumbling
sidewalks could talk –
would the image of god[s]
remain the same.